The parents of a former student at Fairhill School filed a lawsuit Monday in Dallas County against the school after a former teacher pleaded guilty to having a sexual relationship with their daughter.

Attorneys Tahira Khan Merritt and Lori Watson, who represent the girl's parents, said in a press release that the lawsuit alleges that Adams "groomed" the girl. The lawsuit also alleges that based on criminal court documents, Adams had an inappropriate relationships with other female students at the school.

The lawsuit alleges that that prior to his sexual relationship with the girl he was convicted of molesting, the school intercepted a "love letter" written by another girl to Adams, the press release states. The parents' attorneys say the school "failed to take appropriate action" against Adams after the discovery of the letter and did not protect their daughter.

The Fairhill School is for children with learning disabilities. The child Adams was convicted of molesting had dyslexia.
